Appendix A—NASADAD Treatment Standards Membership Consultation Document 281

INTRODUCTION

This document contains a national overview of State-by-State information on licensing, certification, and credentialing standards for alcohol and drug treatment facilities, programs, counselors, and prevention professionals. The information provided discusses each State's substance abuse facility and program approval process, including steps in the application process, fees charged, types of treatment services approved by States, and the national accreditations accepted in lieu of State accreditation. The State standards for counselors and prevention professionals outlined in this document identify the State certification authority, the scope of practice desired, and the extent and type of work experience and training hours required.

State Requirements for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Treatment Facilities and Programs

Treatment program standards typically apply to incorporated entities interested in providing substance abuse treatment services in the various State systems that have evolved for that purpose. By and large the information presented does not apply to individual practitioners, such as psychologists, psychiatrists, physicians, and other health professionals, who serve clients under the umbrella of existing professional licenses or other credentials. Most State alcohol and drug abuse treatment agency standards, however, do have sections that address personnel requirements for individuals working within the programs they approve.

In 1970, States were required to create a State Alcohol Authority (SAA) and a Single State Authority (SSA) for drug abuse to manage formula grants and plan for the delivery of treatment services. Each State developed its own set of treatment standards unique to the State's organizational structure and treatment needs. Today, any organization or agency that seeks to provide substance abuse treatment services is expected to be able to demonstrate the ability to meet the standards adopted in the State in which it intends to provide services. Complying with State treatment standards may take the form of licensure, accreditation, or certification. Licensure typically indicates that a substance abuse treatment program has received formal recognition for demonstrating compliance with standards that must be met before a program legally is permitted to provide substance abuse treatment services. The terms "accreditation" and "certification" frequently are used interchangeably and refer to programs that are recognized formally by the State for meeting the essential requirements in the State's treatment standards. In some States, accreditation or certification is a voluntary process and not an activity required by law. Requirements vary by State and are addressed in subsequent sections of this overview. In many States, a provider also may have the option of demonstrating that its program meets industry standards by obtaining accreditation from a nationally recognized body, such as the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations, the Council on Accreditation, or the Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities. Approximately 13,000 facilities deliver substance abuse treatment services across the Nation.

State Treatment Program Approval Process

Many State laws require that alcohol and drug treatment programs obtain State licenses before operating treatment services; others require compliance with national or international accreditation and certification standards.

In other instances, States require both licensure and certification, depending upon the type of treatment service to be provided. A number of States require accreditation as a precondition of licensure. This requirement most often applies to programs that employ methadone in the treatment of opioid addiction. In many States in which accreditation is a component of licensure, accreditation focuses on clinical care and other aspects of programming, while the additional licensure requirements examine such issues as fire and life safety requirements and other physical plant conditions.

In most States, treatment programs that have not become certified, licensed, or accredited are not eligible to receive State or Federal funding. Similarly, insurance companies often will not pay for treatment services if programs are not licensed, certified, or accredited by the State. In addition, some States require certification or accreditation for certain programs, such as residential treatment, opioid treatment programs, or Driving Under the Influence (DUI) programs, while certification is voluntary for other programs, such as outpatient treatment.

State Approval for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Treatment Programs

Both variations and similarities exist among the States' substance abuse treatment program approval processes. The first step is to complete and submit an application. Application packets may be requested from the State offices named in this document (in many cases, the application can be downloaded from the State Web sites also listed in this document). Submission of an application and a site visit may result in a provisional or initial license that permits program operation. The decision usually rests with the findings obtained from the site visit and typically is valid for a limited period of time. The provisional status provides a new treatment program with the opportunity to begin creating the types of documentation that are necessary to achieve full or regular licensure, accreditation, or certification.

In most cases, the State application packet requests information on the organization or program's identity, address, status (nonprofit or for profit), purpose, description of services, fiscal accountability, quality control procedures, program philosophy, and insurance coverage. Applicants may be required to provide policies and procedures documentation and evidence that the facility meets fire and life safety standards, the Americans with Disabilities Act, and other health and physical plant criteria. The application packet also may contain information on conditions under which applicants may (1) be required to submit and fulfill a corrective action plan, (2) receive a conditional rather than full approval, (3) request a waiver or variance from standards, and (4) have responsibilities in the event of the closure or sale of an approved treatment program. Other information frequently made available to applicants relates to situations in which the State may restrict, suspend, or revoke a program's approval. A description of the process to appeal such decisions also may be provided.

For additional information about both provisional and full approval processes, approval standards, and related requirements, contact the unit of government presented in your State profile listed in this publication. Most States organize their standards into two sections: general standards that apply to all programs, and additional standards that must be met in order to provide a specific type of treatment. States that wish to gain approval for a program to operate as an early intervention program, an intensive outpatient treatment program, or an outpatient treatment program are expected to meet the general or core standards, as well as the standards established expressly for each of these three types of treatment. Frequently States apply additional standards based on the subpopulations to be served, such as adolescents, women, or offenders.

General Alcohol and Drug Abuse Treatment Standards

State treatment standards generally address the following areas:

- Governance—Requirements that must be met by the legal entity responsible for the operation of a treatment program, such as the formulation, approval, and implementation of policies and procedures; approval of annual budgets; program structure and the functional responsibilities of each program component; and oversight of quality assurance and evaluation activities.
- Fiscal Management—Requirements regarding a treatment program’s financial activities, primarily to ensure that a program has the fiscal resources and stability necessary to provide all critical elements of approved treatment services on an uninterrupted basis. Specific standards might address such areas as an annual audit, the establishment of a fee schedule, the development of an annual budget for approval by a board of directors, and documentation of compliance with insurance and bonding requirements.
- Personnel—Policies and procedures relating to employment and employees, including compliance with the Equal Employment Opportunities Act and other relevant Federal, State, and local laws; documentation of required professional credentials; job descriptions; performance evaluations; disciplinary actions and grievance procedures; guidance relating to the use of volunteers and interns; and compensation plans. Typically the State also seeks to determine that a personnel policy and procedures manual has been developed and approved and has been reviewed periodically.
- Statistical Reporting—Data and information that a treatment program is required to submit to the State. Reporting requirements differ significantly from State to State, but they frequently include participation in the State Client Level Data System (CLDS). CLDSs typically are designed to capture information on the number of clients served, the characteristics of those clients, the services received by clients, and treatment outcomes. In addition to client-level data, many States require that treatment providers evaluate their progress toward established goals and make the results of evaluations available to the State.
- Client Rights—Standards ensuring that individuals receiving substance abuse treatment services are made aware of their rights, and that those rights are honored throughout the treatment process. Specific standards might include confidentiality of patient-identifying information, reasonable accommodation of physical or sensory disability, admission without discrimination, and grievance procedures for rights violations. In many instances, standards are included that seek to ensure a patient’s right to follow preferred religious practices, as well as a patient’s right to refuse extraordinary treatment or participation in research initiatives.
- Client Case Records and Quality of Care Reviews—Standards addressing the intake process, clinical assessments, treatment plans, periodic treatment plan updates, progress notes, normed consent forms, referrals, transfers and discharge planning, confidentiality, and storage of client records. Periodic quality of care reviews are conducted to determine if recorded client diagnoses and problems were supported by assessment data, treatment plans were appropriate, and progress notes and other materials accurately reflected the clinical course of clients’ treatment. Additionally, quality of care review standards require the documentation of corrective action recommended by the reviewer and taken for identified program problems and discrepancies. Upon approval, treatment programs most frequently are accredited, licensed, and certified for a 1-year period, although some States offer longer approval periods based on approval scores.

- Environmental Sanitation, Safety, and Fire Prevention—Standards ensuring that treatment occurs in a setting that is safe, sanitary, and supportive of therapeutic processes. An applicant may expect specific standards addressing compliance with fire and life safety codes; the provision of private space for personal consultation and counseling activities; and procedures to prevent and/or respond to fires, disasters, communicable diseases, and medical emergencies. Residential programs can expect additional environmental and sanitation standards to apply beyond those applicable to outpatient treatment services.

States vary widely in the range of treatment types and modalities. For most States, additional standards must be met by providers wishing to offer specific types of treatment and/or to serve designated populations. The State substance abuse treatment agency in your jurisdiction is the best source for information regarding the treatment and professional credentialing standards and requirements that apply to you and your organization.

As a general orientation to the types of substance abuse treatment that might be approvable in your State, please refer to SAMHSA's Treatment Episode Data Set (TEDS), which is a compilation of data from substance abuse treatment admissions and discharges collected by States in monitoring their individual substance abuse treatment systems. The TEDS framework identifies these types of services/settings:

- Detoxification, 24-Hour Service, Hospital Inpatient
- Detoxification, 24-Hour Service, Free-Standing Residential
- Rehabilitation/Residential—Hospital (Other Than Detoxification)
- Rehabilitation/Residential—Short Term (30 Days or Fewer)
- Rehabilitation/Residential—Long Term (More Than 30 Days)
- Ambulatory—Non-Intensive Outpatient
- Ambulatory—Intensive Outpatient
- Ambulatory—Detoxification.

Substance Abuse Treatment Counselor and Prevention Certification Requirements

Most State-approved substance abuse treatment programs require alcohol and drug counselors to meet certain competency standards to provide clinical services to individuals receiving care. These standards are established by State boards or other designated State authorities. The certification boards are authorized to examine and certify all drug and alcohol counselors and professionals for entry into the alcohol and drug counseling profession; provide professional competency standards that promote excellence in care, appropriate education, and clinical training of counselors; and assist counselors in providing quality treatment services.

This manual includes the established standards requirements for all States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and Guam that are current at the time of publication. To review the standards online, or to check for updates, visit the Addiction Technology Transfer Center (ATTC) Web site at <http://www.nattc.org/>. Select the “Certification Info” tab to search by State, territory, country, organization, or keyword. ATTCs are grant programs funded by SAMHSA’s Center for Substance Abuse Treatment.

Depending on the State, drug and alcohol abuse counselors may be referred to as behavioral health counselors, licensed chemical dependency counselors, drug addiction counselors, drug addiction and substance abuse counselors, certified therapeutic counselors, drug treatment counselors, or rehabilitation counselors, or they may be given similar titles. For the majority of States, counselors are considered clinicians who meet the counseling needs of individuals with alcohol- and drug-related disorders, as well as the needs of their families.

State Affiliations with National/International Certification Organizations

Each State has adopted standards developed from the current body of knowledge and accepted practices necessary to demonstrate competency in alcohol and drug counseling. Nearly all State certifying bodies are affiliated members of one or both of the primary national/international organizations that have established professional standards for addiction professionals. A few States manage addiction professional certifications or licensing through State boards.

The International Certification and Reciprocity Consortium/Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse (IC&RC, or ICRC) certifies addiction professionals (certification boards in 40 States, 6 Federal agencies, and 10 countries outside the United States; more than 35,000 addiction counselors in the United States and foreign countries). The organization is described as a “not-for-profit voluntary membership organization composed of certifying agencies involved in credentialing alcohol and drug abuse counselors, clinical supervisors, and prevention specialists.” IC&RC offers five reciprocal certifications (accepted by the member State or regional certifying organizations): (1) alcohol and drug counselor, (2) advanced alcohol and drug counselor, (3) certified clinical supervisor, (4) criminal justice addictions professional, and (5) certified prevention specialist. The IC&RC Web site is located at <http://www.icrcaoda.org/>.

The Association for Addiction Professionals (NAADAC, originally the National Association of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counselors) certifies addiction professionals (nearly 12,000 members and 47 State affiliates representing more than 80,000 addiction counselors). Described as “the nation’s largest network of alcoholism and drug abuse treatment professionals,” NAADAC offers education, clinical training, and multilevel addiction certifications: (1) national certified addiction counselor, level I (NCAC I); (2) national certified addiction counselor, level II (NCAC II); (3) master addiction counselor (MAC); (4) substance abuse professional (SAP) qualification; and (5) tobacco addiction specialist credential. The NAADAC Web site is located at <http://www.naadac.org/>.

Counselor Certification Standards and Approval Process

Certification denotes a counselor’s level of professional achievement and establishes counselor credibility. Some States also have established or adopted certification standards for substance abuse prevention specialists.

Certification standards for drug and alcohol treatment counselors are similar from State to State. The standards normally describe various achievement levels, such as Counselors I and II, or specialist and professional, and usually specify the following requirements:

- Age (usually 18 years)
- Application fee
- Education (ranging from high school or high school equivalency to master's degree)
- Classroom hours (including appropriate college/university credits, structured courses, seminars, workshops)
- Written exam
- Written case presentation
- Oral exam
- Reference letters
- Hours of ethics training
- Hours of supervised clinical experience (in-service).

While only 15 States currently support formal substance abuse prevention programs, 31 States recognize and accept credentials for certified prevention specialists. Only 10 States recognize and accept certified criminal justice professionals.

SAMHSA's ATTC Web site is a rich source of information on State counselor and prevention specialist certifications. This site provides standardized information for all States and links to appropriate certification bodies. The application/approval process varies with each licensing or certifying authority, but it generally includes completion of an application form, submission of a fee, and proof of education and experience. Information on recertification is available on the site as well.

The ATTC Network identifies and advances opportunities for improving addiction treatment—through science, education, and services. ATTC is funded by SAMHSA to upgrade the skills of addiction treatment and other health professionals and to disseminate the latest science to the treatment community. The Network, composed of a national office and 14 regional centers, develops and disseminates useful products and services for the 50 U.S. States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and the Pacific Islands. Individual centers focus primarily on meeting the unique needs in their areas and supporting national initiatives. The national office leads the Network in implementing national initiatives and concurrently supports and promotes individual regional efforts. Areas of emphasis include enhancing cultural appropriateness; developing and disseminating tools; building a better workforce; advancing knowledge adoption; promoting ongoing assessment and improvement; and forging partnerships.

Finding the Information You Need

For each State listing in this manual, the “Facilities/Programs” side heading indicates where to find information on approvals for substance abuse treatment facilities and programs.

The “Professionals” side heading indicates where to find information on State requirements and accreditation for addiction professionals, and also what professional affiliation(s) are adopted by that State.*

For some States, the side headings also indicate whether the individual State has other licensing or certification requirements.

SAMHSA’s CSAT offers interested organizations a wealth of other information on the conduct of efficient and effective substance abuse treatment. CSAT publishes a series of documents on substance abuse treatment to advise providers on best practices and desirable characteristics of treatment services for populations with unique needs. The Treatment Improvement Protocols (TIPs) are “the products of a systematic and innovative process bringing together clinicians, researchers, program managers, policymakers, and non-Federal experts to reach a consensus on various state-of-the-art treatment practices” (CSAT). Some of the topics the TIPs cover include: screening and assessments in both adults and adolescents; treatment modalities for specific drugs of abuse; and treatment services for vulnerable populations, such as pregnant women or individuals living with HIV/AIDS.

CSAT also offers Technical Assistance Publications (TAPs), which provide practical “how to” information on the delivery of substance abuse treatment services. For more information on TIPs and TAPs, please visit SAMHSA’s Web site at www.samhsa.gov.

* The counselor certification standards were downloaded from the Addiction Technology Transfer Center (ATTC) Web site. ATTC is a grantee of SAMHSA.

The State of Alaska does not have its own unique set of AOD treatment standards. CAP Through Licensure

Certification and the Licensed Practitioner

Public and private employers, as well as government-subsidized health plans, are requiring clinicians to prove they are proficient in delivering substance abuse services. Managed care operations are increasingly demanding proof of competency. Certification will make a licensed practitioner a more marketable counselor to the insurance/managed care companies.

The Florida Certification Board (FCB) has recognized the increasing need for licensed practitioners to demonstrate their capability of treating substance-abusing clients. In response to this demand for specialization, FCB will provide a credential for the licensed population that requires the level of specialization and professionalism needed when treating these clients.

Note: Reciprocity is not available with this type of certification. If reciprocity is desired, then the oral exam process must be completed.

In order to be eligible, the applicant must:

1. Provide proof licensure under Chapters 490 or 491, Florida Statutes.
2. Provide proof of 145 hours of addiction education.
3. Provide two colleague evaluations.
4. Pass the International (ICRC) written examination*. There is a $75 fee for this examination. The written exam samples proficiency in the knowledge base areas. It is a multiple-choice, true/false and matching test of 150 items. The knowledge and skill bases for the questions in the exam are derived from the actual practice of the counselor in the alcohol and drug field.
5. There is a $150 nonrefundable certification fee that must accompany the completed application.

On January 1, 1993, the Secretary of the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services was directed by the passage of SB458 to adopt rules and regulations and standards for counselors working in licensed and certified alcohol and drug abuse treatment facilities. The requirements for counselors are listed below.

Individuals can be “grandparented” as a Certified Alcohol and Drug Counselor if they can provide either:

1. Documentation of 1,000 hours of alcohol and drug abuse counseling experience 2 years prior to January 1, 1993
2. Documentation of 3,000 hours of alcohol and drug abuse experience 10 years prior to January 1, 1993

If an individual cannot meet the requirements to be “grandparented” as a certified alcohol and drug abuse counselor, the individual must complete 18 hours of culturally appropriate postsecondary academic credit. The 18 college credit hours must be alcohol and drug abuse specific. Listed below are the areas that must be completed:

- Screening and intake
- Orientation and assessment
- Treatment planning and counseling
- Case management and crisis intervention
- Education and referral
- Reports and recordkeeping and consultation with other professionals
- Multicultural and individual differences
- Individual and professional ethics
- Medical aspects and health related issues of alcohol and drug abuse, including emphasis on AIDS and STD’s

Counselors-in-Training must complete the 18 college credit hours within a 3-year period beginning January 1, 1993, or, within a 3-year period after the individual was hired by the program.

Continuing Education: The licensure/certification standards require alcohol and drug abuse programs to document the completion of 60 hours of continuing education activities for alcohol and drug abuse counselors. These hours should be acquired from activities, which enhance the skills of the alcohol and drug abuse counselor. Documentation of the 60 hours will be kept in the program’s personnel files. Programs will need to submit to AAPS a list of continuing education hours obtained by each counselor for the purpose of recertification. Counselors-in-Training are not required to obtain the 60 hours of continuing education units.

North Carolina Substance Abuse Professional Certification Board (NCSAPCB)

PO Box 10126
 Raleigh, NC 27605
 Phone: (919) 832-0975
 Fax: (919) 833-5743
 www.ncsapcb.org
 j.scarborough@mindspring.com

The NCSAPCB has membership with the IC&RC. In efforts to conform to their standards, the NCSAPCB has adopted the current certification requirements, which were implemented on 1/1/90. The process begins with the individual requesting in writing an application/registration package, including $25.00 to the address above.

At its June 23, 1989, meeting, the Board voted to adopt a Certification process of 3 stages leading toward full certification a substance abuse counselor:

1. Registration:

- Completed registration form
- High school diploma or GED
- Signed supervision contract
- Signed ethical standards form
- Registration fee

2. Substance Abuse Counselor Intern:

Early registration with the Board is not a requirement for entry-level certification. However, should an applicant choose to by-pass early registration and seek the status of a Counselor Intern, he/she must submit all materials and fees necessary for registration plus documentation of 300 hours Supervised Practical Training. Once these materials are reviewed and found to be in order, the applicant will be given a written exam (upon payment of $125 written exam fee). If a passing score is achieved, applicant will be certified as a Counselor Intern. To be recognized as a Substance Abuse Counselor Intern, a counselor must submit and successfully complete the following:

- Completed registration form found in registration/application package
- Documentation of high school graduation, completion of GED, baccalaureate or advanced degree (use transcript as documentation where appropriate)
- Signed form attesting to applicant's commitment to adhere to the Ethical Principles of Conduct of the Board

- Signed supervision contract documenting the continuing supervision process by a CCAS or CCS
- Documentation verifying successful completion of 300 hours Supervised Practical Training
- Successful completion of written exam plus all necessary fees

Once an individual has been recognized as a Substance Abuse Counselor Intern, he/she may function as a counselor under the supervision of a Board approved supervisor at a ratio of 1 hour of supervision for every 40 hours of practice.

3. Certified Substance Abuse Counselor (CSAC):

- 3 years (6,000 hours) full-time, paid, or volunteer, supervised experience
- 270 clock hours Board approved academic/didactic education
- Oral exam/case presentation
- Completed evaluation forms by three references: supervisor, co-worker, and colleague

Recertification:

Every 2 years and 60 hours Board approved training. Minimum of 30 hours in substance abuse specific training and no more than 25 percent (15 hours) can be inservice training. 6 hours of HIV training and 3 hours of professional ethics are required for every recertification.

Certified Substance Abuse Residential Facility Director (CSARFD):

The Certified Substance Abuse Residential Facility Director certification is one that is obtained in addition to the Certified Substance Abuse Counselor. A person must already be a certified counselor in order to obtain the residential facility director certification.

- 50 hours NCSAPCB approved academic/didactic management specific training
- Positive recommendation of applicant's current supervisor
- Positive recommendation of a colleague or co-worker
- Registration/application fee
- Application packet

Recertification:

Every 2 years and 40 hours continuing education

Clinical Supervision

From 1/1/01 until 1/1/03, all applicants for CSAC had to be supervised by a CCS or a CCAS. Since 1/1/03 all applicants for both the CSAC and the CCAS (except through a Deemed Status organization) must be supervised by a CCS or a Clinical Supervisor Intern.

A Clinical Supervisor Intern (after 1/1/03) is a CSAC or CCAS who has submitted:

Note: It is not mandatory that an applicant attains certification as a Counselor I before being certified as a Counselor II or a Counselor III. The important distinction to consider when making an application for any category is the qualification for each level.

In developing a system of certification, the Certification Board must, of necessity, be vested with broad powers to assess the applicant, his/her work experiences, competencies, and training.

The Certification Board may require additional information or evidence in some cases to make an adequate determination of the applicant's qualifications.

Applicants must agree to waive the right to inspect the results of inquires made of employers, co-workers, references, or educational institutions which were sought and acquired in the process of making a determination of certification.

Trainee Status

The purpose of the Trainee Status is to provide professional preparatory status to people working in the field of addictions. Trainees will need an academic training plan, a supervision plan, and plans for obtaining experience in the 12 core functions. These plans may be prepared and monitored by various training programs, tribal colleges, or by the sponsoring agency. At present, these training plans are not mandatory for Trainee Status.

In order to obtain Trainee Status, the applicant:

- Must be currently employed by a chemical dependency program.
- Have a high school diploma or graduate equivalent degree (GED).
- Show that he/she is pursuing counselor certification.
 - Submit the following application forms for Trainee Certification Status accompanied by a bank certified check or postal money order or program check for $75.
 - Signed application
 - Job description
 - Employee verification form
 - GED or high school diploma
 - Trainee Status is for a period of 2 years. Applicants may reapply for an additional 2-year period. Applicants must show that they are pursuing certification in order to reapply for the second trainee status period by submitting appropriate course credit hours and workshop certificates. A letter from the trainee's supervisor must accompany the reapplication.
